

ABSTRACT

A semiconductor device is disclosed which is improved in its mounting reliability and which has external terminals formed by exposing portions of leads from a back surface of a resin sealing member. End portions on one side of the leads are fixed to a back surface of a semiconductor chip, and portions of the leads positioned outside the semiconductor chip are connected with electrodes formed on the semiconductor chip through wires.